A Few Suggestions

In writing us or making reservations with outfitters and guides, a general statement as to your knowledge of the woods would be helpful, particularly when desiring to go into out-of-the-way places.

Do not wait until you are in the hunting grounds before trying out a new rifle. Target practice in the woods frightens game and lessens your chances for a shot.

We recommend that outfitters or guides be not asked to accept personal cheques—a better plan is to carry Money Orders or Travellers' Cheques.

Follow the recommendations of your outfitter or guide as to where you should fish or hunt. He knows the country and your chances for a pleasant and profitable trip will be better if you do as he suggests.

Do not fraternize too freely with your guide or keep him up all night to amuse you. He is there for a purpose—to see that you have a clean and comfortable camp, to give you service and to render the protection that his knowledge of the bush affords. Do not give him intoxicating liquor—it has ruined many a hunting and fishing trip and may, in a pinch, endanger your life.

The Canadian National Railways are not responsible for the actions, conduct or charges made by the various outfitters or guides mentioned in this publication, nor do they guarantee the success of any hunting or fishing trip.

IN order to cover all principal hunting points on such a vast system as the Canadian National Railways, consisting of 22,663 miles, and reaching from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the information in regard thereto must, of necessity, to permit of its publication in a booklet of reasonable proportions, be brief.

It has been our aim to set forth for the Sons of Nimrod, information and details which we believe to be authentic and reliable.

If additional particulars are required on points listed herein, every reasonable effort will be made to obtain them upon application to

Hunting in Canada

CANADA is the last great refuge of wild life on the North American Continent. The more Southerly fauna, described by early American explorers with exhilarating enthusiasm, have paid the price of improvidence and prodigality. The wild life of vast areas of the United States has been rescued from total extinction by the few natural sanctuaries beyond the reach of a crowding population. Canada, however, with its 3,700,000 square miles, contains a hundred wooded empires in which the human voice or the snap of repeating rifles have yet to penetrate. Fewer than 100,000 square miles of Canada have yet been laid under cultivation. Outside of the towns and cities there are just enough people to allow one for every square mile within the Dominion's boundaries. It will be apparent, therefore, that with common-sense game laws and the growing instinct of true sportsmanship among hunters, Canada will continue to harbor and propagate the most important forms of North American wild life.

The Canadian people, during the past ten years, have taken to heart the national lessons taught by the virtual extinction of the buffalo, the wapiti, the eskimo curlew and the passenger pigeon. By intelligent legislation and public opinion they have made sure that the wasteful and irremediable story shall not be told of the moose, the grizzly, the deer or the rich variety of feathered game. Conservation, with ample liberty, is the accepted wild life policy to which all the provinces have wholeheartedly subscribed. This sensible determination of the Canadian people reflects their keen sense of trusteeship for the recreational needs and desires not of Canadians alone, but of all men everywhere who know the language of the forest trail and thrill when the birch horn speaks.

Not alone does Canada by the immensity of her forest area (the forests cover 500 million acres) provide a compensating reservoir for the mammals and the birds with which the United States was once well stocked, but on account of physical characteristics Canada represents a distinct faunal region with species of animals rarely or never found elsewhere; for example, the moose, the wapiti (misnamed elk), the caribou, the bison or buffalo, the musk ox, Rocky Mountain sheep and goat, the prong buck or antelope. It is true some of these animals are found south of the boundary, but Canada represents their natural range and under Canadian conditions their highest development is reached.

It is a commonplace with experienced hunters that game refuges or sanctuaries are to the sportsman what storage dams are to the user of water power. Years ago the Dominion and provincial governments withdrew from settlement and all forms of exploitation more than 19 million acres of the finest wild life breeding and feeding grounds in the country. In British Columbia and Alberta this has brought about a marked increase in deer, mountain goat, sheep and black bear, while in Eastern Canada the moose is more than holding his own and deer, in the majority of districts, show no signs of reduction. While the 19 million acres of refuges are closed to the hunter, the admirable restocking affect on the major area of hunting territory makes the chance of game exhaustion too remote for consideration.

Contributory to this happy situation, in the sphere of game and non-game birds, has been the Migratory Bird Act, jointly accepted and enforced by the Governments of Canada and the United States. This international instrument has reduced and made uniform the open seasons. At the same time a close season was established on shore birds for a number of years with absolute prohibition of the slaughter of insectivorous birds. The hampering affect of these provisions is far outweighed by economic and other benefits. Meantime has come about a notable increase in wild fowl. Probably no country is so naturally inviting to wild ducks, geese and grouse, with super-abundance of nesting places and food supplies to be found in vast areas of remote marshes, ponds and lakes. In the partially explored hinterland of Ontario and Quebec, for example, where one may travel in places 400 miles across the virgin woods without seeing more of civilization than an old tote road or a guide's cabin, the steady propagation of wild fowl has undergone no serious check. The inroads of a shooting season are usually offset by the natural increase.

The inclination of sportsmen is to look for new fields. And yet the modern hunter is not prepared to abandon his business for months at a time and organize tedious expeditions to distant regions, as with the South African big game hunter and his costly "safari." Probably in history there has not occurred the peculiar union of virgin hunting grounds and simple means of access as in the case of Northern Canada and the great inter-ocean system, the Canadian National Railways. The last and most extensive of the trans-continental lines constructed on the North American continent, the Canadian National, followed routes of largely virgin country into which settlement can proceed for a half century to come without challenging, to any extent, the primitive resources of woodland and wild life. Over twenty-two thousand miles of finished steel traversing the easy grades of a 500 million acre forest does not suggest much chance of overcrowding.

As with copper mines or pulpwood, so with hunting grounds, accessibility is the first consideration. Given an illimitable animal and bird breeding wilderness, the sportsman of to-day demands the full facilities of civilized travel. He will bear pluckily with any hardship on the trail or knuckle down to a two-hour vigil in a duck boat, but "going to" and "coming from" he takes his rightful share of luxury. The Canadian National Railways, so conspicuously equipped to carry the sportsman to new and richly-stocked regions, has drawn the approval of hunters everywhere by organized preparation for their comfortable transport. Systematic checking and culling of sporting information, district by district, a conscientious policy of directing individuals and parties so that results will more than pass expectations, an avoidance of exaggerated claims and guess-work and a faithful co-operation with every visitor planning a holiday in Canadian National territory, has built up an army of friendly sportsmen whose confidence is prized and safeguarded.

"Canadian National Railways are doing their share to reduce forest fires—may we not ask for your kind co-operation."

Nova Scotia

NOVA SCOTIA shares with New Brunswick the distinction of being uniformly favored by hunters after big game, by which term most men mean moose and deer. Nova Scotia's vast area is sometimes not fully realized because of its modest showing on a full-sized map of Canada. Of a total of 21,000 square miles, about 70% is regarded as adapted to forests rather than to agriculture. Settlement has been continuous and profitable in the fine valley soils, but even to-day there is scarcely a district where local residents have to journey outside their own county to be well repaid with gun and rod. Woodland growth is extraordinarily rapid, due to the high average of moisture and burned areas reproduce so abundantly that game is seldom driven far afield in search of cover and food. There are, therefore, few sections where guides have found it necessary to shift ground, or where the visitor is not fairly certain of taking a sportsman's reward. The private game clubs are not as common as in Quebec or New Brunswick, but the game laws are soundly based and well enforced and natural conditions of climate, plant life and isolation are so favorable that the size of moose heads in 1923 and 1922 and the abundance of deer quite equalled the records regarded as remarkable and unrepeatable ten and fifteen years back. That Nova Scotia has more big game to the square mile than any other province in Canada, except New Brunswick, is a boast which has substantial fact behind it. Guide services are very easy to connect with and the type of man, through pride in his calling and keen respect for the unwritten laws of sportsmanship, makes a reliable and likeable companion in those intimate hours of the trail and campfire.

Nova Scotia has yet another appeal. It is a hunting ground involving no hardships of pack trains, long marches or tiresome waggon trips. The degree of accessibility of the best game areas surprises those distant visitors brought up on mysterious apprehensions of the "Canadian Wilderness." Modern trains of the Canadian National absorb any heavy labor of "getting to" or "coming back." Whether to the geographical centre or the Eastern route to Cape Breton Island or the South Shore journey to the extreme Western town of Yarmouth, the facilities of fast travel and courteous service are at the hunter's disposal. This simplifies for many the project of hunting in Nova Scotia, for even a week's vacation can be turned to productive account in actual hunting, and without undue expense.

Depending upon the composition of the outing party, the time allowed and the kind of game sought, the inland waters of Nova Scotia will sooner or later invite an adventure. The rivers are almost without number and most of the waters are safe for travel. Geese, brant and duck shooting, during a season of generous legal latitude, has seldom proved disappointing and on hundreds of miles of seacoast line, the shooting of shore birds gives continuous and abundant sport without particular hardships. The visitor, presumably, will fetch along his fishing outfit or bemoan his unpreparedness. No fun of the outdoors quite rivals a ten-minute tussle with a Nova Scotia salmon or a thrilling afternoon by the rocky edge of a trout stream.

New Brunswick

NEW BRUNSWICK is a sport-bred province. Its people are all familiar with the sporting spirit of rod and gun. Forest cover is practically everywhere—eighteen million acres of it. The industrial cities and towns border the seacoast and the great rivers, and farm settlement holds to the rich valleys. Reaching back into the hardly-broken interior of heavy woodland, rocky slopes, brule, swamp and crystal lakes lies an empire of wild-life retreats too massive and broken ever to imperil, under wise game laws, the sustained yield of game. From generations of happy experience almost every farm boy is a disciple of shot gun and rifle and would count his Fall months worse than wasted if his day's adventure failed to provide a good bag. This proclivity for wood life has given New Brunswick a distinctive asset in a body of organized, well-trained and disciplined guides, masters of their craft, and right good companions by campfire or trail. The New Brunswick guide has no superior anywhere. He operates under license in a district of fixed boundaries, and by this sensible arrangement no two parties shoot over the same ground at the same time. An absence of human casualties is the result. Camps are unusually well equipped, properly located, and by reason of many years of exacting experience the guides take special care not only to put first things first in bringing hunter and quarry together, but to fetch him home to a good bed and a well-assorted larder. New Brunswick, therefore, has become a place of "developed" sporting facilities. At the same time this fact should not suggest the over civilizing of the woods or the introduction of any dilletante element into what will always remain the realm of hardy self-reliant men and—yes, nowadays—of hardy outdoor women.

Knowledge of the nature and administration of New Brunswick's game laws breeds high respect. Not alone are these laws keyed to wild life conditions but their enforcement is both vigorous and reasonable. The big game season opens for deer from September 15th to November 14th and for moose from October 1st to November 30th. Both moose and deer, despite the great inroads of hunters each year, are maintaining their numbers and disinterested authorities claim a material increase. As with well-applied game laws everywhere, natural reproduction of big game species in the vast remote regions easily balances the toll of the rifle. This applies equally to feathered game, for the great stretches of woodland, lake and river and swampy meadow harbor without diminution abundant treasure of duck, partridge, and plover and the keen shooting days of Fall seldom fail to give returns in geese, duck and brant.

Caribou hunting in New Brunswick is under official ban indefinitely. Bears, however, are anybody's game and no license is required other than a permit to carry fire-arms. In August and September the open "burns" and partially deforested country abound in blueberries, bruin's favorite food, and while patience will be taxed in stalking bears in broad daylight with little cover, the opportunities are there and the sport has its own peculiar thrill.

The Canadian National Railways has a special strategic relation to the game resources of New Brunswick. A glance at the provincial map will show its two great transecting lines from north to south with cross lines cutting through the natural zone of game animals and birds. Whether approaching the province from west, south or north, these roads lead directly to the centre of practically all that is worth while in New Brunswick hunting.

Prince Edward Island

PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND—"Garden of the Gulf"—is not a big game country because of its size, 130 miles long and from two to thirty miles broad, but because it is more intensively and thoroughly cultivated than any other province of Canada. Of remarkable beauty in its pastoral scenes and a great holiday country for thousands who love the moods of the ocean and the joys of unsurpassed sea-bathing, the Island has a more restricted attraction for the hunter and is also limited in salmon fly-fishing. At the same time there is first-rate sport in wild fowl, as geese, brant and various kinds of ducks. During the Fall months, shore bird shooting such as snipe, and an abundance of woodcock and plover assure ample rewards for the modest outlay of time and effort. The districts about Tignish and Souris, reached from the extreme western and eastern ends of the railway are usually chosen by local sportsmen and visitors who "know the ropes."

The Prince Edward Island Railway, now part of the Canadian National, operates 270 miles of line and gives access to practically every town and village on the island. The method of reaching the island is by crossing the Straits of Northumberland from Cape Tormentine, New Brunswick, to Port Borden, P.E.I., on one of the finest equipped steamship ferries to be found anywhere.

The officers of the Prince Edward Island Tourist Association at Charlottetown and Summerside (W. R. Tinney, Secretary, Charlottetown) will very gladly render all possible assistance to visiting sportsmen and endeavour to see that they are placed in a locality which offers excellent sport, as will also the proprietors of the various principal hotels, which are:—

Charlottetown Victoria, Beach Grove Inn, Queen, Revere, Davies, Russ, Lennox.

Summerside Mawley, Clifton, Queen, McKenzie.

Souris Sea View, Oakley, Bay View.

Quebec

TO understand why such a Province as Quebec, the oldest settled province in Canada, should remain the most diversified hunting range on the North American Continent, requires a word of explanation. Quebec contains over 400 million acres. Its Northern boundaries meet the waters of Hudson Strait and the untrodden wilderness of the Upper Labrador. To the South it spans the river St. Lawrence and rims Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine. Within this far-reaching territory dwells a population of three million persons, the city of Montreal and suburbs accounting for more than one-third. The remaining population, to a great degree, obeys the traditional French-Canadian instinct of concentration in settlement, picturesquely extended mile upon mile along the main highways, with the narrow agricultural fields reaching far back from the farm houses. Likewise in such newly-opened districts as the Abitibi, the French-Canadian settler asserts his preference for continuous social contact. He colonizes intensively and, while a born pioneer, an unsurpassed woodsman and the most considerate and courteous of human kind, his industrious efforts have placed only 10 million acres under tillage, leaving over 390 million acres to the undisputed sway of Nature.

A Province of utmost diversity of terrain, from hundreds of miles of flat land to winding mountain ranges, vast reaches of uncut, unburned Spruce and Balsam forests, chains of townships of solid White Pine where the axe has yet to ring, river courses where many days journey run through second growth of yellow Birch and Poplar and scattered conifer. Interior waters, like Lake St. John and Lake Edward, wooded to the water's edge, tidal rivers as the Saguenay, mammoth rivers like the Peribonka, 400 miles long, flowing into Lake St. John and the Mistassini, 300 miles long and 2 miles wide at the mouth. There are literally thousands of rivers and lakes in the northern areas that, for years to come, cannot be inventoried or mapped. Moose and deer in such unharried environment have resisted not only any threat of extermination, but any likelihood of serious reduction. The Government of Quebec has left nothing to chance. Sound protective game laws and the creation of enormous sanctuaries have made wild life perpetuation reasonably secure. Such a sanctuary as the Laurentides National Park, 2,500 square miles in extent, has spread its surplus of moose, deer, caribou, bear and feathered game over the whole countryside. In consequence, poaching has fallen off materially and pot hunting has given way to legitimate sportsmanship.

Quebec province believes in the principle of private game preserves and scores of clubs have come into existence, primarily to give assured and continuous hunting to their members but, more important even in effect, to enforce professional rules and establish game conservation within their boundaries. The area of all the clubs is an inconsiderable percentage of the natural hunting ground and, far from "monopolizing" sport, the clubs have only multiplied wild life and have stocked hundreds of miles of adjacent land. Arrangements can be made with many of these clubs whereby non-members can enjoy full privileges during the hunting and fishing season.

Inasmuch as the Canadian National Railways was the most recently-built system in Quebec it has driven its lines largely through pioneer territory. Wooded rivers cross and recross the right of way, virgin lakes and tangled bush make a kinetoscopic film of thousands of miles broken for great distances only by trappers' cabins and lumber camps and neat little villages with their sparkling spires. The whole Laurentide region and the Lake St. John country, the abounding game territory tapped by the Transcontinental line that runs North-westerly from Quebec on through to Winnipeg, these are the very antithesis of the over-crowded, over-exploited, game-shy country which, in more Southerly districts, gives the hunter little but exercise and disappointment. In consulting the Canadian National Railway system at Montreal, Canada, express clearly what game you seek, what time and money you can spare, the make-up of your party and with such information in hand the hunter is assured that closely-checked knowledge of each district will be placed immediately at his disposal and a conscientious friendly effort made to realize the fullest success of each individual venture.

Ontario

ANY hunter who cannot find big game in Ontario territory north and west of North Bay, in the vast expanses of forest and lake, contradicts common experience. Hunting parties bound for Canadian National wild life zones have multiplied extraordinarily in recent years, drawn by word-of-mouth testimony, and could continue to multiply indefinitely and still raise no quarrel over elbowroom. A continuous woodland of a hundred million acres, nearly all of it open to the huntsman, allows more sanctuary, more trail, river course, lake and swamp than will ever be called for by human or animal needs. In such a "quantity of country" hunters are so widely dispersed as to be in practically no danger from careless shooting, a serious consideration in heavily-settled districts repeatedly hunted over by all sorts of gunners.

Northern Ontario is particularly adapted to sportsmen whose time and patience and pocketbook have to be calculated. The hunter-in-a-hurry, with very little money to let go, can take rapid passage to the best grounds of Ontario and usually get his moose or deer. There is more than a fair chance of exciting sport almost at any spot on the lines north and west of Ottawa. Three moose were, in fact, shot within ten miles of the Capital of Canada last Fall. But north of Lake Nipissing is surer. White-tailed deer are also an easy bet. They have extended north in the wake of settlement until they may be expected pretty well up to Cochrane and west-north of Lake Superior to the Manitoba boundary and beyond.

Sioux Lookout or Minaki would make good centres for a Northern Ontario trip, giving undoubted opportunities for success with the rifle and some rattling good fishing as well. Good fishing is general in Northern Ontario; the country is broken with thousands of lakes and a variety of diversion can always be expected by the fisherman. Lake trout are very widely distributed, but brook trout, small-mouthed black bass, maskinonge, and pike will help the larder and fill the days with sport. Consult the seasons, and limit as usual.

Ruffed Grouse provide the most important upland bird shooting in the big game area. If they are hard flying wary birds that have had some education, they will be even worse to bag and hence better sport in the heavy Northern forests than they are further south. In some sections where they are lacking in knowledge of firearms, they may be found almost as stupid as Spruce Partridges, but the survivors learn fast.

Waterfowl are scarce in the big game section of Ontario, most of the clear deep lakes of the North not being suited to their needs. There is lots of wildfowl shooting in the Province, however, but it is generally south of the heavy forests where the big game haunts are found.

Northern Ontario has a great attraction to offer in its lakes and woods. There are not too many people to share Ontario out-of-doors, and perhaps that is why one feels so free and untrammelled with such small things as business when roaming here. The balsam bed is always welcome after a full day on the trail in the fall woods of the North.

Transport is almost entirely by canoe, and one can paddle his own, or have guides to do the paddling and packing.

For licenses apply to the Deputy Minister of Game and Fisheries, Toronto.

THE TIMAGAMI FOREST RESERVE

A magnificent area of pine-lands constitutes the Timagami Forest Reserve. Stretching one hundred miles from north to south and ninety miles from east to west, it comprises a virgin territory of nearly four million acres. No settler or lumberman has ever been nor will be allowed to despoil it of its wooded wealth. Each rugged promontory and towering hill, the watered valleys and the rocky islands remain as they were centuries ago, clothed with the forest primeval.

Life in abundance pervades this forest region—the life of the wild. The moose and the mink, the bear and the beaver may rightly regard Timagami as their undisputed possession. Here, year after year, they make their happy homes, to increase and multiply and replenish the earth according to the primal law. The wild goose knows this lovely retreat and numbers among his feathered friends every variety of partridge, duck and snipe, which here may enjoy comparative safety.

Man is not altogether absent from this wilderness. The Indians long ago established themselves hereabouts in tiny settlements, fishing, hunting and trapping. Attracted by its wealth, the Hudson's Bay Company early sent emissaries who set up their trading posts. The Jesuits followed to teach. The successors of these pioneers have ever since regularly arrived to remain, season after season, leading lives of duty, of self-denial, of practical isolation, from their own kind—lives austere indeed, but absorbingly full and interesting.

And here, year after year, come the tired dwellers in crowded cities, to find a resting-place where, for a brief space, they may enjoy the unsullied beauties of Nature with her bounteous gifts of health and peace and joy.

Resting in the midst of this green wilderness of the Timagami Forest Reserve like some gigantic octopus with its innumerable legs and arms and feelers stretching out in every direction into this wonderland of evergreen hills, lies Lake Timagami.

The shore line of Lake Timagami provides a canoe trip of 3000 miles without ever a lift or a carry, yet the lake is never two miles wide. Its 1,600 islands and islets—there are 1,259 surveyed and numbered ready for leasing to prospective cottagers—provide an endless variety of scene.

It might be thought that inconvenience and hardship must be endured to reach this wildwood elysium, but the opposite is the fact. The trains of the Canadian National Railways, carrying the most modern equipment, including standard sleeping cars, convey passengers direct to Timagami Station, located on the main arm of this wildwood lake. Timagami is just three hundred miles north of Toronto and four hundred and fifteen miles west of Montreal.

The lordly moose is Timagami's show animal. In July and August, they are often seen swimming in Timagami's water, or feeding on the lily pads of the small surrounding lakes,

When the open season comes they are more wary, and have retreated to the ridges of the uplands, and not a little skill is necessary to get one.

The red deer is not found in any great numbers in the immediate neighborhood of Lake Timagami, but in the territory between North Bay and Timagami Station they are found in abundance.

The ruffed grouse, commonly called partridge, and the pine grouse, are plentiful anywhere in the forest. Wild ducks nest all over the lake, and during the summer it is a common sight to see mother and her fleet of ducklings sailing within a few yards of your canoe. Wild geese nest farther north, but Timagami waters are full of geese during the open season, as they are on their way to the south.

Lake Timagami lies in the Laurentian area. Its shores and hillsides are composed of crystalline or granitic rocks. Almost entire absence of limestone has caused its water to be comparatively soft. The hard nature of its shore line and bottom has prevented disintegration and the formation of mud or sand. Everywhere you will find the bare, clean rocks and the crystal clear waters into whose pellucid depths you may gaze to a distance of twenty or even thirty feet.

Guides and outfits may be arranged for through the Hudson's Bay Co., Bear Island P.O., or through the Timagami Fur Co., Timagami P.O.

Accommodation may be secured at the following camps during the hunting season where reliable guides will be provided as well as complete camping outfit, provisions, etc., if required: Camp Wabi-Kon, H. The Prairie Provinces

THE Provinces of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba have much to offer the sportsman. To begin with they are not all prairie. Western Alberta is as mountainous as British Columbia, and the game is abundant and of similar kinds. The great National Parks lying along the eastern slope of the Rockies are the home of countless sheep, goats, deer and other game mammals, and the surplus from these totally protected areas flowing ever outward keeps the hunting sections stocked in a way not equalled in many places. Jasper National Park, as well as being the centre of the preserved area, is the outfitting place of numerous hunting parties, and full information can be had from the various outfitters located at Jasper, Alta., whose names are shown elsewhere in this booklet. The charms of the surrounding mountains should be absorbed at leisure, and the Park made a stopping place even if one's hunting instincts invite a journey to more distant fields.

Although the hunting of the buffalo is a thing of the past, and sportsman will be amply repaid by a visit to Buffalo Park, Wainwright, Alberta, where the largest Buffalo herd in the world is free to roam within the vast fenced confines of a National Park. As far as the eye can see, the rolling prairie is dotted with the dark, massive, slowly-moving beasts feeding peacefully in scattered groups, or in the case of the old outlaws from the herd, alone. The field glasses will bring other moving dots into range right to the horizon, and the thrills of the observer as he recalls the history of the plains and sees the plains as they were before the white man came, will be at least worth the "price of admission," which is nothing. Be sure to stop at Wainwright.

The outstanding game feature of the prairies is water fowl. Here is the heart of the water fowl breeding ground of North America. Here will be seen the geese and ducks in numbers that will make the visitor from less favoured parts of the continent doubt his senses and pinch himself to make sure that he has not passed on to the Happy Hunting Grounds. In truth, the pleasant journey on a first-class train has brought him to the happiest hunting grounds a duck shooter or goose shooter ever expects to find. No decoys are the rule, in Saskatchewan, live ones are taboo, and often as not none is needed. Flight shooting, stubble shooting, shooting at geese from pits in the stubble, wandering at will over lovely countryside, make prairie days in fall a joy forever. And when the ducks need a rest the Sharp-tailed Grouse and Prairie Chicken shooting fill in with joys of their own. Then too, in southern Alberta the European Partridge has been introduced, and affords the most important game bird shooting to be had.

The Mule Deer ranges eastward wherever there is cover, to Manitoba, and the White-tail is found across these three Provinces to the mountains. Fully three quarters of Manitoba and at least the northern two-thirds of the Provinces of Alberta, and Saskatchewan are wooded, poplars predominating to the south, and conifers northward. In all three Provinces Moose, Caribou and Deer are obtainable. Prince Albert, Edmonton and Winnipeg all can be used as starting points for reaching the big game country. Once in the woods Ruffed Grouse are found as well as the Sharp-tail. Of course all the grouse are subject to periodic decreases, but barring the off years there is splendid grouse shooting. There is fishing too in many of the lakes in the forest belts, and in the mountain streams.

When the Canadian National line pioneered in opening the Northern prairies, it opened new big game country and it gives access as well to literally hundreds of good places for shooting both waterfowl and upland game birds.

For combined waterfowl, upland bird, and big game the prairies are unsurpassed.

British Columbia

DO you enjoy the thought of crisp fall mornings, with streaks of sunlight streaming across blue-shadowed valleys to light the summits of mountains, real mountains, the most worthy of the name on our continent? Have you seen the cloud shadows float airily on their undulating way across forest clad mountain slopes on such a morning? Have you ever dreamed of a hunter's cabin tucked away in the shadows of the valleys where game could be earned by those of the steady hand and eye, and where a couple of weeks' health insurance (and game assurance as well) may be had by the man with a moose taste even if he has a rabbit income? If you have, you will have the trip of your life when you decide to make this year's hunt in British Columbia. There is variety of scene in every vista; there is variety of game unequalled; there is variety of price to suit all.

The outstanding difference between outdoor travel in the east and in the west is the pack-horse, which does not seem much when said rapidly, but even the most experienced canoe traveller of the east will find he has much to learn when he turns from tump-line to diamond hitch. To travel long distances by pack-train costs money, and some of the more remote big game districts are not accessible without. It is not necessary to take long trips in British Columbia however, as witness the fact that twelve moose were seen in one group on the Fraser River this spring by the passengers in the observation car of a Canadian National train. The moose were then about 150 yards from the main line track, and no pack train will be needed by the hunter who starts after his moose in this section when the snows settle low on the mountains next fall.

Prince George is the centre of big game hunting so far as the easily accessible areas go. Of course there are deer wherever there is cover for them in the mountain province, but in this hunters' heaven there is a mighty fine chance to find Moose, Caribou, Black Bear and Grizzlies, without getting too far from the line. The more remote sections from Prince George through to Atlin afford as good big game hunting as can be found anywhere, but a trip to these back parts of a rough country are only to be undertaken at some considerable expense for horse transport. Telegraph Creek lies in this area, and is just about right for the man of means who wants the best in Moose, Caribou, Sheep and Goat hunting.

The section bordering the Brazeau country of Alberta is well worth a visit, and affords good goat shooting, while to the East of the Divide there are sheep and caribou. Then again, to the south of Prince George lies the Quesnel district where Moose, Caribou, and Bears, both Black and Grizzly can be found.

Besides the widely distributed and abundant big game of the Province there is good bird shooting. Quesnel lakes district might be mentioned among many, many others for ducks and geese. Blue Grouse are not abundant enough to count upon except in a few favoured sections, but "ruffed grouse," called "willow grouse" here, are scattered generally through the Province in suitable country. There are pheasants on the mainland near Vancouver, and on Vancouver Island, and both Valley and California quail have thrived on Vancouver Island. The fisherman will be delighted with the trout fishing of the Province, and even inveterate hunters of other game do not disdain a breakfast of smoking fried trout once they have gathered in a mountain appetite.

The hunting in British Columbia is good and it is different. The man who once tastes the zest of a mountain hunt will always come back.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT CUSTOMS REGULATIONS

The articles which may be brought into Canada (in addition to wearing apparel), on which no duty is levied as tourists' outfits, comprise guns, fishing rods, canoes, tents, camp equipment, cooking utensils, musical instruments, kodaks, etc.

A deposit of duty on the appraised value of the articles imported must be made with the nearest Collector on arrival in Canada, which deposit will be returned in full, provided the articles are exported from Canada within six months.

EXPORT OF DEER, CARIBOU, MOOSE, ETC.

1. Deer (covers all members of the deer family, i.e., deer, moose, caribou) when shot for sport under Provincial or Territorial authority in Canada, by any person not domiciled in Canada, may be exported under the following conditions and limitations, through any Customs Port in Canada on the frontier of the United States.

2. The exportation of deer in the carcass or parts thereof (except as to cured deer heads and hides of deer) shall be permitted only during or within fifteen days after the "open season" allowed for shooting deer under the laws of the Province or Territory where the deer to be exported has been shot.

3. A person, not domiciled in Canada, who has shot deer for sport and not for gain or hire, under Provincial or Territorial authority, may make an export entry in duplicate of deer in the carcass, or parts thereof, so shot by him and allowed to be exported, upon subscribing and attesting before a Collector of Customs a Declaration in the form shown elsewhere, which form shall be annexed to said export entry.

4. The Collector of Customs at any Customs Port of Entry designated for the Export of Deer, upon receiving the said export entries duly completed, may thereupon under the seal of the Custom House, issue his permit for the exportation of the deer, if satisfied as to the identity of the sportsman and that the exportation is not prohibited.

5. Sportsmen must bear the following in mind when shipping trophies out of Canada:—

(a) That the Canadian National Express will not accept Moose, Deer or any part thereof for shipment to United States or other countries unless Declaration Form (copy of which is shown elsewhere) is duly completed and signed by a Canadian Collector of Customs. In addition to this document, customs invoices and Export Entry Forms must be submitted with the shipment.

(b) If there is no Canadian Customs Officer at the point shipment is made, ship trophy, addressed to yourself at Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Cochrane, Winnipeg or other gateway point, preferably the one by which you will return to the United States. As this will constitute a domestic movement only the above papers will not be required, then

(c) On your arrival at Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, Cochrane or other point, secure copy of Declaration Form (C.N. Express Form 5487) from the Express Agent and present yourself before the Collector of Customs and have Form duly completed. After having this done Form should be handed over to the Agent of the Express Co. (to the Depot Agent in the larger cities) together with the other documents mentioned in paragraph (a) and arrangements made with him to re-forward the trophy to destination in the United States.

In the past, difficulties have been encountered by reason of sportsmen proceeding to their homes in the United States without completing necessary Declaration Form as called for. Consequently shipments have been held up, and the blame has in many cases been shouldered onto the Express Companies, who are in no way responsible. If the foregoing rules are complied with, no delay will be encountered.
